(Open)

For more than three years, the loved ones of a dozen Kuwaiti families have been held prisoner at the U.S. Naval Base in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. These prisoners have noneo the fundamental rights the U.S. guarantees by law and, to date, no charges have been brought against them. And recent news stories report that American interrogators in Guantanamo continue to physically and psychologically torture these prisoners until they make false statements about themselves and fellow prisoners.

In June of 2004, the U.S. Supreme Court ordered the Defense Department to either bring these men to trial or set them free. To date, the government has not complied with this order. Hofstra University Law Professor Eric Freedman:

(Freedman)

"In June, the U.S. Supreme Court said if you're going to hold people you have to come to court and tell us why that's so. And since then the government of the U.S. has done nothing to implement that ruling and indeed has acted as though the ruling never happened."

"There are nights I just can't sleep... I'll walk into my son's bedroom, and hope that just being in his room and seeing his clothes, his bed or his shoes will comfort me. But of course, it doesn't ... and I end up getting so, so sad ...."

The families of Kuwaiti prisoners have launched a campaign aimed at appealing directly to the American people. Their symbol is the familiar yellow ribbon, first used 25 years ago when the American people suffered as their friends and loved ones were held hostage at the U.S. Embassy in Iran.

The Kuwaitis are appealing to the United States government to comply with the Supreme Court's ruling and give their fathers, sons and brothers their day in court.

As Illegal Imprisonments Continue, Kuwaiti Families March Worldwide

A Resolute Appeal to the American People from Thousands of Miles Away

The families of 12 Kuwaitis are continuing their somber worldwide vigil to attract the attention of the American people to the plight of their fathers, sons, and brothers – imprisoned for more than three years by the U.S. government in Guantanamo Bay without the legal and humanitarian rights guaranteed by U.S. law and the Geneva Conventions.

Wearing yellow ribbons, the families marched first in Kuwait City and then in London, appealing directly to the American people to demand that the Bush Administration comply with the Jude 2004 rulings of the U.S. Supreme Court.

The anguished families cannot come to the United States, but they will gather anywhere elseth the world where the American people might be able to see them and to hear their message.

If the detainees are suspected of being criminals, put them on trial. If they are not, let them go. That's what the Supreme Court ruled in June 2004. But the Kuwaitis at Guantanamo languish on, deprived of contact with their families.

At this time of year, families are gathering throughout the world to give thanks and to worship God together. At this time of year, the anguish of the Kuwaitis is all the more unbearable.

The yellow ribbons are symbols of hope and longing that all Americans should recognize.

They're teachers, students, accountants, airline engineers. For Khalid Al-Odah, the father of Fawzi Al-Odah, the prolonged separation from his son led him to found the Kuwaiti Family Committee, which includes almost 100 people.

"We have suffered such great pain, but we will not despair," said Khalid. "Our goal is simple and reasonable. We want fair trials for our loved ones."

Fawzi had gone to Pakistan to teach reading and writing. Like so many of the detainees at Guantanamo, he was fulfilling a religious obligation to perform charitable works when he was captured by local bounty hunters.

Since then, Fawzi's family has only received a handful of letters from him. "To be away from your son breaks your heart," Fawzi's mother Souad said. "But to know that he wants to come back to you and cannot, that's pain that won't go away. The sooner Fawzi gets to see a judge in the U.S., the sooner we may see him too."

The Story of the Yellow Ribbon

For more than three years, the loved ones of a dozen Kuwaiti families have been held prisoner at the U.S. Naval Base in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, without any of the fundamental rights America guarantees by law. Forbidden to speak with their families or their attorneys, these Kuwaitis are imprisoned with hundreds of others from various nations, even though no charges have ever been brought against them.

In June of 2004, the U.S. Supreme Court ordered the Defense Department to either bring these men to trial or set them free. To date, the federal government has not complied with this order.

The families of those prisoners, desperate for the release of their loved ones, have launched a campaign aimed at appealing directly to the American people, whose government is holding the prisoners without any notification of a trial date.

Their symbol is the familiar yellow ribbon, first used 25 years ago when the American people suffered as their friends and loved ones were held hostage at the U.S. Embassy in Iran. Khalid Al Odah, head of the Kuwaiti Families Committee, remembers the first yellow ribbon movement occurred when he was training to fly Kuwaiti military jets with U.S. Air Force colleagues in the United States.

"Everybody was singing the popular song by Tony Orlando and Dawn: 'Tie a Yellow Ribbon Around the Old Oak Tree,'" Al Odah recalled. "It was a very moving and effective sentiment. We are using it today because we want to speak to the American people in their own language. If we can connect with the American people, maybe they can help us get our message to the U.S. government."

To make their appeal, the Kuwaiti families are demonstrating peacefully, starting in Kuwait City, where organized marches have taken place. Other events are planned for London and the United States.

The families are only seeking justice for their loved ones – the same kind of justice guaranteed under the U.S. Constitution and ordered by the U.S. Supreme Court earlier this year.

But while lawyers and legal scholars debate the issue in courts and on editorial pages, these Kuwaiti families wait, trying to understand how the imprisonment of their loved ones can go on after more than 1,000 days.

While they make their legal and emotional appeals in the United States, the families of the Kuwaiti prisoners wait at home for their loved ones to return.

This press release is distributed by Levick Strategic Communications on behalf of the International Counsel Bureau. Additional information is available at the Department of Justice in Washington, D.C.

FOOTAGE OF GUANTANAMO BAY AND OF FAMILY MEMBERS INSIDE A KUWAIT HOME; STILL SHOTS OF DETAINEES

For more than three years, the loved ones of a dozen Kuwaiti families have been held prisoner at the U.S. Naval Base in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, without any of the fundamental rights America guarantees by law. Forbidden to speak with their families or their attorneys, these Kuwaitis are imprisoned with hundreds of others from various nations, even though no charges have ever been brought against them.

SHOT OF SUPREME COURT AND BREAKOUT OF COURT LANGUAGE FROM DOCUMENT

In June of 2004, the U.S. Supreme Court ordered the Defense Department to either bring these men to trial or set them free. To date, the government has not complied with this order.

SHOTS OF KUWAITI FAMILY MEMBERS IN KUWAIT HOME

The 12 Kuwaitis were captured by Pakistanis and turned over to U.S. authorities in late 2001. The Pakistani villagers and soldiers were paid bounties for delivering these captives. Poor themselves, these bounty hunters had every motive to turn over as many strangers as they could catch, regardless of guilt or innocence.

SHOTS OF ISLAMIC CHARITY WORK

Many of the prisoners had put themselves in harm's way to fulfill a sacred religious duty. Islamic faith requires charitable work, and many of the Kuwaiti men were volunteers, working with the Red Cross, organization X and other humanitarian organizations (Gene, do you know if this was the case? I'll continue to research). They were digging for water wells, teaching blind children how to read, and delivering food and supplies to those left homeless by the massive U.S. air attacks in Afghanistan after 9-11.

SHOT OF YELLOW RIBBONS AND SIGN ON KUWAIT HOME

The families of those prisoners, desperate for the release of their loved ones, have launched a campaign aimed at appealing directly to the American people, whose government is holding the prisoners without any notification of a trial date.

Using the familiar yellow ribbon, first used 25 years ago when the American people suffered as their friends and loved ones were held hostage in Iran, the families hope to move the American people and their government to action.
